Are You Concerned About How Your Housing Affects Your Health?

The Study

We want to find out if people who are HIV-negative experience similar health and housing issues as people who are HIV-positive.

To Qualify

You must have tested negative for HIV in the past 12 months.

What's Involved?

You will be interviewed twice over a period of two years.

You will receive $40 for each interview.

We will keep your identity strictly confidential.

Background

We have already learned that people with HIV who have trouble paying their rent or are worried about losing their housing have poorer health and lower quality of life than those with access to stable affordable housing.

Now researchers funded by the Canadian Institute of Health Research are looking for HIV negative individuals from across Ontario to participate in the Positive Spaces Healthy Places study about HIV and health.
